THE Undersigned call the attention of Masters and Agents of vessels discharging at this port to the great advantage to be gained in point of convenience, despatch, and economy, by making use of their Wharves at New Harbour.

With the assistance of steam cranes, a general cargo can be landed easily in a few days—or in about one-fifth of the time usually occupied discharging in the roads.

There are large, dry, and very commodious brick godowns on the wharves, which vessels have free use of for cargo while discharging.

The trouble and disputes with, and pilfering of cargo common among boatmen, are avoided by vessels using the wharves.

Cartage of cargo to the town (which is within easy distance) is guaranteed to be not more than lighterage from the roads, and the coolie hire discharging alongside is less.

There is always a large stock of the best English and Welsh coals on the premises, which are supplied to steamers at the lowest market price, and vessels going alongside to take in or discharge coals pay no wharfage.

Vessels discharging cargo pay a wharfage of 20 cents per ton—a trifling charge, when the immense advantages gained are taken into consideration.

Arrangements have been made by which all repairs to ships or steamers can be done with despatch while the vessels are lying alongside the wharves.

There is an efficient European pilot on the premises, and, when required, a steam tug is always available.

HONGKONG, JULY 14TH, 1868.

THERE are two things very much wanted in Hongkong—a Lunatic Asylum and a Court of Appeal. In a colony which contains two such monuments of folly as the Mint, at East Point, and the New Gaol, at Stonecutters' Island, there can be no doubt as to the necessity for the first, and no difficulty in providing a suitable building wherein to locate it. That a Court of Appeal is equally a necessity, no one who has given the least attention to the position of affairs in our law courts during the past twelve months or two years, can deny. The Supreme Court of Hongkong, presided over by a single judge, is at the same time a Court of Admiralty, of Probate, of Bankruptcy, of Common Law, and of Chancery. It is, moreover, a court exercising a supreme criminal jurisdiction, and deciding, frequently, on questions of life and death. In this commercial community suits involving vast sums of money, important interests, the fate and fortunes of many, are continually brought before it for decision. Nice points of law that in England would call forth all the argumentative ability of a powerful bar, and all the critical acumen of learned and experienced judges to discuss and decide, are here raised before and decided by one man, who, when at the bar, was neither the most learned nor the most talented of its members. The same man has to deliver judgment to-day on an intricate question of maritime law; to-morrow on a recondite question involving a knowledge of the common law and of constitutional history not often to be found. A Chief-Justice in Hongkong has, it is true, arduous duties to perform. With the most earnest desire to decide in all cases in accordance with law, to deal out equity to every man, to be impartial, vigorous, and just under all circumstances, it is impossible for any man to avoid frequent and serious errors. There are many questions of law on which the most learned judges and the most able counsel will conscientiously differ. A judge is but a man after all, with passions, prejudices, and weaknesses like the rest of mankind, and imperfectly his views are warped and biassed by these prejudices, and by these weaknesses. This being so, admittedly so, not merely in theory, but in the daily experiences of life, is it not a grievance that there is no redress, no power of appeal, no corrective tribunal nearer than Great Britain, none inferior in dignity to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. An appeal to that august tribunal involves an expenditure of time and money that very few care to face, no matter how dissatisfied they may be with the judgment on their claims pronounced here. He must be very litigious who, without having large pecuniary interests involved, proceeds to dispute the d aling of the Supreme Court of Hongkong before a tribunal so distant. The result is that few cases, very few, are appealed.

Perhaps during the progress, let us say, of a case at Nisi Prius, three or four important points of law are raised. The Chief-Justice sitting alone rules one way or the other. So far as that case is concerned the points raised are set at rest, but are they accepted in the next case that arises as being settled law? No. They are still open to argument, to renewed discussion. The Judge himself does not profess to follow his former decisions implicity. In England if a Judge at the assizes rules that a certain thing is law, the full Court of which he is a Judge is at hand to reconsider, and, after learned argument, either affirm or disallow his ruling. If the beaten party is still dissatisfied, he has the Exchequer Chamber open to his appeal. Above that still there is the House of Lords. A point of law decided in one or other of these appellate Courts is settled law in all inferior and co-ordinate Jurisdictions, until reversed by a superior Tribunal. In Hongkong the dictum of a single Judge must be accepted as final. The laws in force here are complicated and in many cases difficult to ascertain. They differ in many points from the law in force in England. The Bankruptcy Ordinance would appear to be so drawn, so says the highest judicial authority in the colony, as to render it almost impossible to put it in force. Yet there is no appellate tribunal on the spot to settle the most trifling question in dispute. It is most sincerely to be hoped that this condition of affairs may not exist much longer. It is intolerable. Perhaps Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL may be able to help the colony to more settled law, and to a more decorous practice, by using his influence to obtain the appointment of some court of appeal to the east of Singapore.

The Circus.

The first performance of the "horse opera," is advertised for this evening, and we understand it is to be what is termed a "grand night." It is almost needless for us to say anything in praise of a company already well known to this public, and who have received its commendation in a flattering manner more than once. The troupe has lost nothing by its visit to Shanghai and Manila, and it will be enough to say that the old favorites will all appear.

Police Intelligence, 13th July.
BEFORE C. MAY ESQ.

TRYING TO IMPOSE ON A PROFESSOR.

Two decent-looking Chinese, described as chair-coolies, were brought up charged with endeavouring to obtain more than their proper fare, and also with using abusive language.

Professor Wheeler, of the tonsorial art, otherwise "barber pidgun," who has lately returned from California, and resumed business here, said on Sunday about six o'clock he took the prisoners chair and went a short distance to the westward. He remained out three quarters of an hour, including a stoppage of a quarter of an hour, and on arriving at his rooms in the Queen's-road he gave them 30 cents. They demanded more, and made a noise, so he brought them up to the station.

The prisoners denied that they had endeavoured to "come round" the Professor in such a manner, they owned having received 30 cents, but they never, like Oliver Twist, "asked for more."

Mr. May administered a severe lecture to the unfortunates, and then fined them $2 each, or seven days' imprisonment.

SUNDAY ENJOYMENT.

Five seamen of different nations were severally brought up for being drunk, and assaulting the police. In every case they were men who had obtained leave to come ashore to enjoy themselves, and in pursuance of that worthy object, had become "jolly," "happy," "quarrelsome," and then "drunk," in which last stage they had all fallen into the arms of the Sikhs, (who, by the way, are generally-called "Darkey policemen," by offending seamen.) Various small fines were inflicted by Mr. May, and paid by the delinquents companions, who in all these cases carry off their rescued "chum" to drink good luck to him, and then send him on board his ship.

ROBBERY ON BOARD THE "YESSO."

Ko-a-tai, cook, Cheung-a-po, cook and Leon-n-kuen, lamp-trimmer, on board the steamer Yesso, were charged with stealing $276 from Cheung-a-tye, steward of the same vessel.

Complainant said on the 11th instant about nine o'clock, when at Swatow, he missed $176 in cash, and a further $100 in three letters. The money was all taken from his box, the lock of which was wrenched off. The prisoner Ko-a-tai had a key of the room where the money was, which room was generally locked. He was with the captain when the first prisoner's cabin was searched. There was found therein above $200, and other property. First prisoner said he was entrusted with the money to give to different people in Hongkong.

Captain Ashton said that Ko-a-tai, the first prisoner, had noted as passengers' compradore during the last voyage, and was possessed of a key which opened the room where the complainant's box was. On the 11th instant he had a complaint made to him, by last witness, that $276 had been forcibly taken from his box. He searched the prisoner Ko-a-tai's cabin, and found about $268 in loose paper. The man said that the money was entrusted to him to give to several parties in Hongkong. He gave the prisoners in charge, on arriving at Hongkong. There had been many robberies on board the Yesso, and he was most anxious to find out the rogues. The prisoner, Ko-a-tai, produced certain letters when the money was found, and told him that they were letters of advice.

The letters put in by Ko-a-tai were examined by the interpreter, and nothing was mentioned about money in them.

Mr. Douglas said he believed the prisoner, Ko-a-tai, had been in gaol on remand on some charge, but he was not sure. The second prisoner was an old offender. The third was not known in the gaol.

A Chinese merchant came forward and said some of the letters found were addressed to his firm. One instructed him to buy certain articles, but no money is mentioned nor is the prisoner's name set down therein. The second prisoner had before brought down letter, but never money.

Mr. Goodlake discharged the second and third prisoners, but remanded the first (Ko-a-tai) for one week.

FEMALE GAMBLERS.

Five women and two men, (one blind), were placed in the dock, charged with gambling in an unlicensed house.

Chunn-kun, a Chinese lukong, stated that about a month back he was in Station-street, Taipingshan, and seeing persons going in and out of a particular house, he went in to see what was going on. On getting inside he found gambling going on. He stopped there and played, eventually winning three dollars; was there on another occasion and lost five dollars. The game was played the same as "fan-tan," only dominoes were used as counters instead of cash. (The cunning ladies had found out that dominoes was not considered a gambling game). He was there when the police came, and at that time the second woman was acting as banker.

Sergeant Patrick Haley said he went with a large party of police to a house in Station-street, which had been pointed out. He went into the house and when on the first floor, he saw several of the prisoners standing round. Gambling was going on there being two mats spread on the floor, most of the prisoners had children with them, therefore he believed that they lived in the house.

Chun-a-yat, lukong No. 9, who also went with the police to the house, recognised the second prisoner as the woman who was banker. Some time back he was passing the same house, when the blind old man (6th prisoner) called to him, "come upstairs, and make your fortune." A rather dubious system of accumulating wealth certainly.

The prisoners all made the most ridiculous of defences; the text of most being that the lukongs were bringing a false charge against them. The second prisoner, who was accused of being the banker, burst into passionate lamentations in defending herself, but it is to be feared that the tears had not the intended softening influence on His Worship's heart, for he fined her and the old blind man $50 each, or two months' imprisonment, and the remaining prisoners $20 each, or one month's imprisonment.

ASSAULT BY A PUBLICAN.

George Rayner, Landlord (?) of the "Rising Sun Tavern," in the Queen's-road, was brought up on a warrant charging him with having committed an assault on Charles Newman, an ex-policeman.

Complainant who appeared with a serious-looking wound on the front of the head, said, on Sunday night, at about nine o'clock, he went into the defendant's house, and asked for a bottle of gin on credit. The defendant said that if the gin would poison him he would give it to him. He moved towards the door on finding the defendant's disposition towards him, and just as he was going out, defendant struck him with the bar that fastens the door. He bled very much from the wound, and was then taken into hospital.

Sergeant Hawes said he was opposite the door of defendant's tavern when the affair between the complainant and defendant took place. He distinctly saw Rayner strike complainant on the head with the bar, which was held in both hands. He then went to arrest the defendant, but bad language was used towards him, and he could not take defendant. He afterwards got a warrant and went to the house; he knocked nine times, and finding no attention paid to his summons, he then broke open the door, and took defendant from the temple of morpheus.

Defendant attributed the cut on Newman's head entirely to accident, saying that the complainant abused him, and struck him in the first instance.

Mr. May said it was a case that demanded a severe punishment, money would not meet the ends of justice. Rayner was then sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

This sentence surprised both defendant and his friends seemed, who to expect only a fine.

MR. LYALL'S BANKRUPTCY.—Mr. Lyall's bankruptcy case has not been proceeded with since it was adjourned on the 21st ult. The grounds of opposition are based on the alleged misappropriation of goods practised by Mr. Maclean in Hong Kong, and it does not appear, so much the object of the opposing creditors to implicate Mr. Lyall in questionable transactions, as to call the attention of the public and the Legislature to the action of the Hongkong Court in according Mr. Maclean the full benefit of the bankruptcy law, while so much remains to be explained ere he should have been entitled to the indulgence which misfortune alone confers the right to claim.—London and China Herald.

English and Chinese Education.

(From the "Supreme Court, and Consular Gazette.")

In our last number we adverted briefly to the subject of Chinese education, and endeavoured to trace a few of the leading effects which it produces upon the general character of the natives of this country. The subject is one of considerable interest; as in China, we see in full force a system of education bearing a very close analogy to that which, up to a comparatively recent period, was looked upon in England as the most efficient mode of imparting such instruction as will fit a man for occupying a useful and dignified position in life. The classical education of twenty or thirty years ago was very much more like the classical education of China at the present day, than the admirers of the old system would be at all pleased to admit. The lengthened and wearisome cramming of grammatical rules, without an idea as to their meaning, is a scarcely less preposterous plan, or a more serious piece of mental oppression, than the three or four years' humming of unmeaning characters, that forms the initiation of the Chinese scholar into the mysteries of the literature of his country. Indeed, in some respects, the palm must be awarded to the Chinese system; as, if the Celestial youth obtains no other advantage by his first three years' study, he must at least gain some faint idea of the construction of his own language; an end which is scarcely attained by English scholars under our classical system, until a comparatively late period. The great object of Latin and Greek is generally said to be to perfect a man in the construction of his own language; and it is not improbable that to a certain extent this effect is produced; but it is an open question whether that mode is not somewhat suggestive of the old plan of roasting a pig by burning down a house. If the practice of cramming the memory at an early age is to be resorted to, we think a useful hint could be taken from the Chinese; and that it would be preferable to set our youth the task of committing to memory some of the writings of our own best classical authors, to dissipating their energies over works which it is impossible for them to understand when they learn them, and very little likely that ninety-nine out of a hundred will be able to study more deeply at a future period of their lives. Except as a bare exercise of the faculty of memory and the moral qualities of patience and perseverance, it is probable that only in very rare instances is any direct advantage derived from classical studies, and it is almost certain that the indirect advantage in respect to knowledge of the English language is not by any means so great as the results which would be produced by the simpler course of committing portions of good English works to memory. It is a matter of very common remark that a man's education in reality commences after he has left school; and in the large majority of instances this is undoubtedly the case. The dog's-eared grammar, Horace, Virgil and other stock books, which it is the habit to allude to as full of delightful associations and memories of happy youthful days, are dropped with noticeable alacrity when a boy leaves school and are soon thrown aside and entirely forgotten, as the adolescent mind turns to the contemplation of things instead of their semblances. The late period at which many great scholars have given the first evidence of their powers, proves how little, as a rule, the ordinary drilling at school has to do with anything like a high development of the intellectual faculties; and the reason of this is probably not very far to seek, when the old system of education with its merciless routine of cramming the memory is borne in mind.

In a similar way, the more enlightened and better informed Chinamen seem to have but little respect for the prescribed round of classical studies; and are not by any means insensible of their defects, as a means of acquiring such information as may be useful in life. The purely literary class are, however, loath to yield to any arguments against the time honoured system. They cannot admit that so many years of their life have been wasted, or worse than wasted, and they feel that their own prestige is dependent upon maintaining the reputation of the old system. It is noticeable in regard to this how cautiously the introduction of foreign science was recommended in the memorials to the throne on the subject of which translations were some time ago published in these columns. The opposition of the whole of the literary class would no doubt have been the result had not some tribute been paid to the classics, and an attempt, somewhat clumsy it is true, made to shew that the changes proposed were in strict accordance with the ancient usage. Although the Chinese are sensible of the defects in their system of education, they resign themselves to their fate, and few parents consider it worth while to attempt any innovation with their children; while professional schoolmasters have not the courage to adopt any new mode of instruction. Thus although possibly in itself the recognised standard of Chinese education has some merits which the old style of teaching in England did not possess, there seems to be by far greater difficulty in making any advance upon it than we have found in instituting improvements at home. Of late years, as is well known, very great strides have been made in this respect, not only in England, but in Europe generally. Education has become regarded, as it undoubtedly should be, strictly as a means to an end; much of pedantry and useless routine has been happily abandoned; and endeavours, in some instances eminently successful, have been made to develop the reasoning and thinking powers, as well as the mere force of memory, of the pupils. How far exercise of pure memory and the simple acceptance of dicta and rules by the students should be the end aimed at in early education, is a point where there is room for wide difference of opinion; but the shell of antiquated obstructiveness has at home been fairly broken, and it is recognised by all, that both faculties should from the first be brought into play, and improvements with this object have been largely effected.

In China, some dim perception of this fact has dawned upon the more enlightened; but very little has as yet been done to ameliorate the old system. The fact that Anglo-Chinese schools have always been popular with certain of the Chinese, shews that they are not incapable of estimating the value of practical subjects being taught at an early age; and would probably be open to some improvement on their present system of education, if any energetic attempt were made either by foreigners or natives in that direction. The various missionary schools, especially those of the Catholics, are gradually working some effect, and it may be hoped that they will prove sufficient to do something towards moving the vis inertia which has fixed itself upon Chinese education, and which in the words of an authority on this subject, results in a vast number of instances, in nothing less than intellectual infanticide, the children often being unable to get beyond the first three or four years' cramming of meaningless characters, which is thought to be an essential introduction to learning of any kind. A morbid development of memory, and a cramped system of reasoning, hedged in by all cases in the views and opinions expressed in the classics, the result naturally to be anticipated from this system, tend to perpetuate that prejudice and narrow-mindedness which have long prevented China from participating in the progress which has characterised Western nations. The first steps necessary towards any real improvement of this country will probably have to be made in the direction of introducing some improved method of educating its youth; and the attention of the well wishers of China may be advantageously directed to this subject. It might be well if schools such as the Anglo-Chinese school at this place, where an education partly Chinese and partly English is given, and where religious teaching is not made compulsory, were as widely as possible disseminated in China; and to such a work our missionaries might, we think, with very great advantage direct their energies. This mode of improving the Chinese, might appear slower than the dogmatic preaching of Christianity; but we are convinced that in the long run it will prove surer; as it would wean the natives from many of the errors of their own system, without depriving them of the advantage of what is good and useful in it; it would supply their minds with larger views and truer ideas, without forming an impassable barrier between them and their friends and kindred, and would no doubt ultimately result in some modifications and improvements in the old system in China, now universally in force, not because the Chinese consider it without serious faults, but because they do not clearly see in what way they should set about its amelioration.

KING THEODORE ON THE STAGE.—The Temps says that the Chatêlet Theatre, in Paris, is about to put in rehearsal a grand drama in five acts and twelve tableaux, entitled, Theodorus, King of Abyssinia.

A Romance of Real Life.

And now I have got little bit of modern French history. It curiously illustrates the truthfulness of Shakespeare as a writer of fiction and of modern newspapers as publishers of facts. Nothing is so like fiction as fact, and perhaps nothing so like real good fact as clever fiction. But to my story, which, though taken from an old and very black-letter book, which is never permitted to circulate when it can throw any light on the subject before the public, is strictly true—a family history, told to me by the two guardians of the dear young thing, which will recall that of Romeo minus the virtue, and Juliet minus the poison. A few years ago, Count Hector de la Roche-Trompette succeeded to a fine estate and castle, and that "heritage of woe" of which we have all heard—but, besides being "lord of himself," M. le Comte desired to be lord of somebody else, and so looked out for a party—they spell it parti here; but the French are so stupid. Like many members of the "Blessed Babies" and "Swells about Town," and other clubs here, our Count had—not to use too strong an expression—rather overdrawn his account at Fridolin and Co.'s. Being asked how that had happened, he said, "Alas! philanthropy and the Rue Fallait pas pa'y aller." But long suffering bankers at length wrote (in French, of course, but the meaning is the same) "overdrawn," and so our poor friend agreed to sell the "Towers,"—a nice little property which he had inherited from a long line of "Towers," his ancestors. He asked the opinion of two people whom we see here every night—Mdlle. de la Farandole and M. Pepin. They said, "Sell, mon cher, sell." The very next estate to this one, which was now in the market—I read the advertisements and the bills myself—chanced to be Crécy Crécy, a country house, to the chef of which we are indebted for that carrot soup which we get so often—I may say so very often—at Paris restaurants. Now there had long been a bad feeling between the families—a sort of plague on both their houses, in fact, Crecy-Crecy kept hounds, and there was an ugly story of a three-legged wolf—which the whip was ready "to take his Bible oath had been trapped"—which was found in Trompette Spinny. Then their politics were different, and they had ancestral disputes. They both, "in the good old times," wished to plunder the same travelling merchants, and to "dungeon," the same men for the sake of plunder—in those days called "ransom." But the question "Dov' è la Donna?" must also be asked about these feudal families. In the glorious reign of Henri IV. both the houses fell in love with the Belle Gabrielle, both right from their point of view, no doubt. But one day Crecy-Crecy told his wife he was going to the club to play at bowls (little expecting the rubber he would get); but really he went off to the hotel of Mdme. Gabrielle It was in the t en Rue de Bréda. He came, he saw, he rang. La Belle answered the door herself. "You can't come in," said she, "for I have a friend from the country here." "Who is it, Belle?" asked the godfather of carrot soup. "Hush! it is the King." Crécy rather slipped away than otherwise. Half a mile off he saw the great King himself in his Victoria. Crécy called to his boy to stop; and the King seeing that, stopped his Victoria too. "Well, Crécy, how goes it?" said Henry of Bearn. "Nicely, Majesty," said the courtier (they were very friendly; "but what in the name of St. Louis are you doing here?—thought your Majesty was breakfasting with Belle!" "Triple idiot," said the King, "don't you know that I never go there now except on Tuesdays!" The real breakfaster was the Roche-Trompette of that day—a bold, bad man and therefore much affected by married ladies, who used to call his stories "fie, fie," and, when they were quite over, tap him with their fans and tell him to "have done now." The family bad not, old as is the scandal, forgiven this, when Hector fell in love with Jeanne. And let me assure our kind readers, that here is no modern scandal. Hector, though wild, would not have considered himself a man if he had ever done anything to bring a blush on beauty's cheek (beauty usually now does that business, herself, and très foncée, too), and as for Jeanne, I cannot better describe her than by using the words of her respected, and I may add, respectable, if old world and conservative, father. "Sir," says he, "we have a family and a name, also a motto, to which we act up right away" (he has travelled in the United States), "My name is Purée Crécy and my daughter is Crécy and pure." Last night at twelve the couple were married by special permission, and will, I think, live long and happily on that stage to which they have been called, and where applauding friends and pleasing music attend them during their "moon of honey." Do not think that this is a castle in Spain, for it is one in France; it is a true story, too—true as I heard it. If it differs in toto from any history of a château and its inhabitants and next neighbours which you have ever heard, I and only very sorry; but you will find that it is the exact truth about the Châtain à Toto about which MM. Offenbach, Meilhac, and Halévy are chattering every evening at a large party in the Palais Royal.—Paris Letter.

Intellectual Reputation.

(From the "Pall Mall Gazette.")

Persons who have trained themselves to habits of nice discrimination in the use of epithets that mark character often have their ears vexed by the looseness and confusion of common speech. One hears people in sight of a landscape, or in a great cathedral, or before a famous picture use such terms as beautiful, handsome, fine, splendid, pretty, noble, and so forth, in a promiscuous manner that is very painful to anybody who knows that these words are no more synonyms than red and blue are identical colours. It is just as vexatious to observe the same kind of confusion in criticising intellectual and moral quality. Clever, able, gifted, distinguished, and all the other phrases which are meant to define some sort of intellectual superiority or eminence, are thrown miscellaneously hither and thither, as if the kind of power implied in them all were one and the same. One very obvious inconvenience of this looseness of usage is that a critic can never be certain of his words being understood in the sense in which he wishes them to be understood. It is really a serious drawback not to be able to praise a man for cleverness without the risk of ninety-nine persons out of a hundred believing that you thus intend to place him on the same high level as the man whom you credit with ability or with distinction. This inconvenience impairs what would otherwise be the excellent fun of hearing, as we often may, some ponderous Dryasdust, the author of voluminous patriotic commentaries, eulogised by ladies of his acquaintance as wonderfully clever; the writer of burlesques extolled as gifted or distinguished; and the smartly humouristic person or an author of graceful verse as extremely able. But there is another point about this which is worse than a mere inconvenience. That the various epithets for intellectual eminence of any kind should be used in lax and confused fashion is the certain sign of a corresponding defect in the popular analysis and estimate of different sorts of reputation. People bestow their adjectives without nice judgment because they possess little discrimination of the manifold diversities in capacity and grasp and fineness that exist among men, and that are variously demanded for the many sorts of work that men have to do. Clumsy and unintelligent distribution of qualifying epithets is the natural symptom of a defective appreciation of the qualities which they really denote. We acquire a habit of talking of cleverness, ability, distinction, as synonyms, because we have a habit of assuming that all intellectual fibre is of much the same quality provided only it be at all above the ordinary quality. This mistaken way of looking at capacity necessary infects the objects of it, and a blundering style of panegyric aids and abets the delusions of self-love in persuading a man that he is of much loftier rank than he has any real pretensions to claim. Encourage one whose special qualities are acuteness, adroitness, rapidity in cut and thrust, a ready handing of his metaphor, and the other traits of a clever man, to believe that he has rich gifts of sensibility, and the chances are ten to one that he ranks himself among poets and novelists; call him able and powerful, and he will straightway aspire to play a conspicuous part in transactions that demand not metaphor and adroitness only, but coolness, steadiness, longheadedness, tact, and knowledge of the ways and moods of men.

Cleverness, which in common speech is used as the most comprehensive and lofty of all terms of intellectual encomiasm, ought in strict propriety to denote qualities of the least rare and valuable kind. No men are so agreeable to meet or to have among one's acquaintances as clever men. Their books and speeches are excellent. Their brightness, alacrity, shiftiness, are all delightful. But, then, to deserve the reputation of being able, which is the next higher stage in the scale, they must have something more. There are scores of clever men whom we have no right to call able, but there are many able men who are clever too. The latter will be classified according to the preponderance of the two sets of qualities, whether their solid or their more brilliant traits predominate. It is a natural blunder to hold that a very showy man is only clever. The single instance of Sydney Smith, one of the ablest as well as one of the wittiest of the writers of the century, might suffice to slay this fallacy. Still the able man has properties some degrees more uncommon and more serviceable than he who is only clever and nothing besides. In literature what cleverness usually secures is a power of expression so remarkable as to conceal or at least divert attention from thinness of thought, slenderness of acquired knowledge, and unreasoned judgments. Mr. Disraeli's novels are perhaps the very best illustrations we have of what is emphatically and distinctly clever. They have brilliant whiffs of history, philosophy, society, romance, and most other fine things about them, and they are pleasant enough reading; but they are seen by anybody who cares to turn back to the idols of his college days to be incurably flashy. It is the characteristic of the clever man to get now and then at a right opinion, but then the result appears to be and is an accident. With the able man his opinion is not only right; it is a reasoned opinion. He can tell you why it is right, with what kind of arguments it is met, with what it may be rebutted; into what general system or scheme of opinions it fits; what consequences flow from it. This completeness of his opinions is one of the main reasons why, while we only admire the clever man, we allow the able man to be our leader.

In spite of the number of persons to whom distinction is profusely ascribed, those with a right to it are much fewer than either the clever or the able men. In both of the two latter types their superiority over their fellows is pretty exclusively a superiority of intellect from the point of view of its strength. But if you call a man or woman distinguished, and are not simply using the phrase in the vulgar sense in which a person with a parcel of earls and viscounts to dinner, like Lord Royston, for example, is said to have entertained a highly distinguished company, then you mean not strength but some other quality of understanding, for which it is not easy to find a second name, but which implies delicacy, refinement, some subtle flavour, in a word. Perhaps the comparative rarity of this, as against the two other types of intellectual character, may be best made visible if one tries to make up a list of the living writers whom one could only and discriminately place under this head. Clever writers abound, both in a great and in a small way, from men like Mr. Dickens and Mr. Disraeli down to men like Mr. Sala. Able writers abound, too, from Mr. Mill downwards. But in how many writers do we find genuine distinction of soul, expressing itself in genuine distinction of style? One thinks of Dr. Newman and the authoress of "Romola;" and how many are there besides?

Another misapplication of an epithet which has a very good and useful meaning of it own is to call a man gifted to whom nature has given nothing except his five wits and industry. There are successful men of strong character, with ample attainments, polished tastes, and meditative judgment, who may be described as having had to reclaim their intellects as lands are reclaimed from the wilderness of the sterile sea. In other words, their original mental soil was hard, stony, intractable, unfruitful. Whatever has been gained has been the product of slow, patient, and assiduous cultivation. Such a man himself at least, may feel a touch of sardonic humour as he hears of his being gifted. In the really gifted man his powers have come spontaneously, and their exercise has always been a natural and joyful process. It is surely worth while to keep a word for a nature of this kind; it marks a difference which no other word does between Shelley, for example, and Wordsworth. And this discrimination in language is the only guarantee for discrimination in thought.

The House of Commons went into Committee last night on the Government of India Amendment Bill, when a preliminary discussion arose on the working of the Council and fears were expressed of over-interference. Sir Stafford Northcote afforded an explanation, and admitted that the Executive Government should be conducted in India, but maintained that it was necessary to have control here, in London. He assured the House that the Council had shown no disposition unduly to interfere in the details of administration. A commercial telegram from London dated June 27th quotes fair dhollera at 9d. Western at 8½d. market very quiet. The Dutch Coffee sales had gone off satisfactorily, 92,000 bags having been sold at 31c.

We have been favored with a copy of the Madras Times of the 20th instant, in which the private Telegram referred to above is given as follows:—

"LONDON 17th June.

"John Bright is dead."

So far from throwing any doubt upon this intimation, the Editor in another column gives a lengthy obituary notice of the departed statesman, as he supposes, from which we learn that John Bright is 57, and that he made his maiden speech in Parliament on August 7th, 1843, from which date his has been a most active public life both in and out of Parliament. The writer in the Madras Times well says in concluding his article that:—"In John Bright England has lost one of the most eminent illustrations of a patriot that the present age has seen; Parliament one of its most eloquent and influential orators; and the Liberal Party the very apostle of Liberalism."—Ed. C.O.

In the Madras Athenæum, which we received to-day, however, the Editor points out what we had certainly overlooked that Mr. Bright made a motion in the House of Commons on the 17th! Here is the Madras Editor's joke at his brother's expense:—

In Memoriam—John Bright.—From a private telegram received by a local contemporary, and which forthwith sent the Editor to the old "Men of the Times," we learn that John Bright, the patriot, is dead. Our own intelligence, combined with this, would lead us to believe that this eminent orator and quondam demagogue, though dead, yet speaketh in the House of Commons. It is perhaps due to his being dead, however, that his motion with respect to Nova Scotia has been rejected. We cannot for a moment question the authenticity of our contemporary's "private" information. We prefer a miracle to anything so outrageous.

Preparations such as these would not be required for the conquest of Turkistan or Khorassan."

NEWS FROM THE NORTH.

By the Swatowaide we have Shanghai news to the 9th instant. In the N. C. Daily News of that date the following items appear.

Peking.

It is currently reported here, that Li-hung-chang, disgusted at the treatment he has lately met with, intends to throw up office and retire into private life, as soon as his campaign against the northern Rebels has ended. But another strange rumour is that Liu-ming-chuen, one of his favourite generals who has lately retired from command, to Anhwey; which is also Li's native province, is said to have summoned his division to join him at the end of the current month. What he can want 20,000 men for in the heart of Anhwey is difficult to conceive.

Hakodadi.

The disturbances in Nippon are reacting on this out-port, and producing a perfect stagnation of trade. A correspondent says:—"We are all in great distress here with wars and rumours of war. Trade is completely stopped, and all coinage being stopped by the absence of any Government, there is a complete panic among the merchants."

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Monday Evening.

There has been a fair native enquiry to-day for Bengal Drug, but the anxiety of the holders to realise being so great that, contrary to expectation, prices have further given way. So long as drug, under limits of $680 to $700 a chest, is thrown upon the market at a great sacrifice, and replaced by speculative purchases of the coming sale to arrive on three weeks' time, at a small difference, chances are but very poor for a remunerative business. Under what circumstances it is necessary to pursue such an injurious course in trade, it is difficult to conjecture. It is quite clear, that operations of such a nature will only assist the speculators to inflict a further injury upon this branch of trade, and bring heavy losses upon the shippers of Bengal drug from India; indeed such has actually been the sequel during the past five months. Patna changed hands at $625 to $631½ on cash and credit terms. Benares at $617½ to $620. Patna of the 7th Sales to arrive at $635, on time. Sales of Malwa to some extent have been made to the natives at $660 to $665 upon cash, and credit terms. The following may be taken as the closing prices:—Patna, $625 to $628½; Benares, $616½ to $620; Malwa $660 to $665.

There is nothing to report with regard to the movement of trade to-day, except to note the inactivity and dullness which still continues in every department. It is reported that the rumours regarding the efforts about to be made by the Chinese Customs' authorities at Canton to levy black mail upon the trade of this colony is rather seriously affecting the native community here. This is the second time this attempt has been made, and if there is any truth in the rumours, which, by the way, seem to be very thoroughly believed by the Chinese, H. E. the Governor should, as promptly as he did in the first instance, see the difficulty eradicated. In some quarters the story has gone so far that some assert that a custom house is to be established in Hongkong, and that the Chinese officials are already here looking after the preliminaries. There is actually nothing in the way of business to report in the Piece Goods market. There has been no native inquiry for any description of fabric and not a sale. Raw Cotton has been in some inquiry, but only 520 bales Bombay Staple have been placed at $16.50 to $18.50, prices which show a considerable decline in the Staple. There is no change in the rates for Shares, the market is very dull, and nothing doing.

The present mail steamer brings 484 chests Malwa for this port, and 631 chests for Shanghai. The last Bombay price averaged Rs. 1,522 per chest.

THE Undersigned beg to call the attention of Steamship owners, Engineers, &c., to the

SELF-LUBRICATING STEAM-ENGINE PACKING,

just imported by them, ex Maiden Queen.

It will not gum nor char; is easy on the rods; keeps them clean and polished; reduces friction; is easily fixed; saves loss of time and waste of material; and, being SELF-LUBRICATING, requires the use of NO GREASE.

The importance of increased durability cannot be over-estimated, while its cheapness, combined with the abovementioned qualities, effects a saving to the consumer of from 100 to 300 per cent.

My "WHEELERIAN HAIR RESTORATIVE!!!" I wish to bring to your notice (a discovery made solely by me), the properties of this most wonderful preparation will, I guarantee, have the desired effects of restoring GREY HAIR to its NATURAL HUE, and at the same time preventing baldness; in all cases of diseased human hair, it is most effective, for it removes the outer and older portions of the epidermis and thus frees the pores of the skin much more completely than any of the Brushes or Gloves now in use.

Mr. WHEELER will be prepared to call at the residence of any Lady or Gentleman requiring his services, who may find it inconvenient to visit the establishment, on receipt of a chit to that effect.

Thanking you for past favors, and trusting to meet with a renewal of the same,

We have the honor to remain, Sir,

Extracts.

A Trip to the Holy Land.

An amusing letter in the Alta California from the Holy Land, furnishes the following extract:—

DISMAL RUMORS

At nine in the morning the caravan was before the hotel door and we were at breakfast. There was a commotion about the place. Rumors of war and bloodshed were flying everywhere. The lawless Bedouins in the Valley of the Jordan and the deserts down by the Dead Sea were up in arms, and were going to destroy all comers. They had had a battle with a troop of Turkish cavalry and defeated them; several men killed. There was to shut up the inhabitants of a village and a Turkish garrison in an old fort near Jericho, and were besieging them. They had marched upon a camp of our pilgrims by the Jordan, and they only saved their lives by forming, and they only saved their lives by stealing away and flying to Jerusalem under whip and spur in the darkness of the night. Another of our parties had been fired on from an ambush, and then attacked in the open day. Shots were fired on both sides. Fortunately there was no bloodshed. We spoke with the very pilgrim who had fired one of the shots, and learned from his own lips how, in this imminent deadly peril, only the cool courage of the pilgrims, their strength of numbers and imposing display of war material, had saved them from utter destruction. It was reported that the Consul had requested that no more of our pilgrims should go to the Jordan while this state of things lasted; and further, that he was unwilling that any more should go, at least without an unusually strong military guard. Here was trouble. But with the horses at the door and everybody aware of what they were there for, what would you have done? Acknowledge that you were afraid, and backed out like cowards? Hardly. It would not be human nature, where there were so many women. You would have done as we did—said you were not afraid of a million Bedouins—and made your will and proposed quietly to yourself to take up an unsententious position in the rear of the procession.

I think we must all have determined upon the same line of tactics, for it did seem as if we never would get to Jericho. I had a notoriously slow horse, but somehow I could not keep him in the rear, I coaxed my mule. He was forever turning up in the lead. In such cases I naturally trembled a little, and got down to fix my saddle. But it wasn't of any use. The other girth got down to fit their saddles, too. I never saw such time with saddles. It was the first time any of them had got out of order in three weeks, and now they had all broken down at once. I tried walking for exercise—I had not had enough in Jerusalem prospecting for holy places. But it was a failure. The whole gang were suffering for exercise, and it was not fifteen minutes till they were all on foot and I had the lead again. It was very discouraging.

LAZARUS.

This was all after we got beyond Bethany. We stopped at the miserable mud village of Bethany, an hour out from Jerusalem. They showed us the tomb of Lazarus. I had rather live in it than in any houses in the town. And they showed us, also, a large "fountain of Lazarus," and in the centre of the village the ancient dwelling of Lazarus; Lazarus appears to have been a man of property. The legends of the Sunday School do him great injustice; they give one the impression that he was poor. It is because they get him mixed up with that disreputable Lazarus who had no merit but his virtue, and that never has been of respectable use to me. The house of Lazarus is a three-story edifice, of stone masonry but the accumulated rubbish of ages has buried all of it but the second story. We took candles and descended to the dismal cell-like chambers where Jesus sat at meat with Martha and Mary, and conversed with them about their brother. We could not but look upon these old dingy apartments with a more than common interest.

But we went away from there with increased respect for Lazarus as a man of property. He must have stood high in the village. I love to think of Lazarus, now, as having been Mayor of Bethany at some time or other. If the ancient archives of the village could be found, no doubt they would prove that he had held that office in his time, and flourished gallantly at the head of torchlight processions when the firemen turned out. It is pleasant to me to cherish the harmless fancy that somewhere underneath that mountain of rubbish at Bethany there are stained and smouldering election tickets, with "Vote for Lazarus" on them.

BEDOUINS!

We had had a glimpse, from a mountain top of the Dead Sea, lying like a blue shield in the plain of the Jordan, and now we were marching down a close, flowing, rugged, desolate defile, where no living creature could enjoy life except perhaps, a lizard or a salamander. It was such a dreary, repulsive, horrible solitude! It was the "wilderness" where John preached, with camels hair coats on his backs—raiment enough, but he never could have got his locusts and wild honey here. We were poking along down through this villainous place, every man in the rear. Our guards—two gorgeous young Arab sheiks, with carpets of swords, guns, pistols and daggers on board—were leading ahead.

"Bedouins!"

Every man shrunk up and disappeared in his saddle like a sun-struck. My first impulse was to dash forward and destroy the Bedouins. My second was to dash to the rear to see if there were any coming in that direction. I acted on the latter impulse. So did all the others. If any Bedouins had approached us from either that point of the compass, they would have paid dearly for their rashness. We all remarked that, afterwards. There would have been scenes of riot and bloodshed there that no pen could describe. I know that, because each man told what he would have done, individually; and such a medley of strange and unheard of inventions of cruelty you could not conceive of. One man said he had calmly made up his mind to perish here he stood, if need be; but never yield an inch; he was going to walk, with deadly patience, till he could count the stripes upon the first Bedouin's jacket, and then count them and let him have it. Another was going to sit still till the first lance reached within an inch of his breast, and then dodge it and seize it. I forbear to tell what he was going to do to that Bedouin that owned it. It makes my blood run cold to think of it. Another was going to scalp each Bedouins as fell to his share, and take his bald-headed sons of the desert home with him alive for trophies. But the wild and barbarian chronicles was silent. His orbs gleamed with a deadly light, but his lips moved not. Anxiety grew and he was questioned. If he had got a Bedouin, which Bedouin's jacket, and then count them and let him have it. Another was going to sit still till the first lance reached within an inch of his breast, and then dodge it and seize it. I forbear to tell what he was going to do to that Bedouin that owned it. It makes my blood run cold to think of it. Another was going to scalp each Bedouins as fell to his share, and take his bald-headed sons of the desert home with him alive for trophies. But the wild and barbarian chronicles was silent. His orbs gleamed with a deadly light, but his lips moved not. Anxiety grew and he was questioned. If he had got a Bedouin, which would he have done with him—shot him? He smiled a smile of grim contempt and shook his head. Would he have stabbed him? Another shake. Would he have quartered him—hewed him? More shakes. Oh! horror, what would he have done?

"Rat him!"

That was the awful sentence that thundered from his lips. What was grammar to a desperado like that? I was glad in my heart that I had been spared these scenes of malignant carnage. No Bedouins attacked our terrible rear. And none attacked the front. The newcomers were only a reinforcement of cadaverous Arabs, in shirt and bustle, sent for ahead of us to brandish rusty guns, and shout and brag, and carry on like a pack of lunatics, and thus scare away all bands of marauding Bedouins that might lurk about our path. What a shame it is that armed white Christians must travel under guard of wretched remin like this, as a protection against the prowling vagabonds of the desert; who are always going to do something desperate, but never do it. I may as well mention here that on our whole trip we saw no Bedouins, and had no more use for an Arab guard than we could have had for patent leather boots and stove-pipe hats. The Bedouins that attacked the other parties of pilgrims so fiercely, were provided for the occasion by the Arab guards of those parties, and shipped from Jerusalem for temporary service as Bedouins. They met together in full view of the pilgrims, after the battle, and took lunch, divided the backsheesh extorted in the season of danger, and then accompanied the cavalcade home to the city! The nuisance of an Arab guard is one which is created by the Sheiks and the Bedouins together, for mutual profit, it is said; and no doubt there is a good deal of truth in it.
